Running one prompt with a mixed group

Read the prompt out loud to everybody, then hand out the three versions without announcing who got which one. A student circling a picture, a student tracing a sentence, and a student writing five lines have all answered the same question, so the share-out at the end works — and every one of them has something to hold up. Twelve prompts is one a week from the first week of September to Thanksgiving break.

Also included

- Two teacher pages: the three levels, and how to scaffold up
- Cut-apart picture word bank cards
- Twelve prompts × three levels = 36 journal pages
- Fall vocabulary wall — 30 words with pictures
- Four color section dividers
- Name and date line on every student page

Printing

Student pages are heavy black line art on a warm ground, so they copy cleanly in grayscale — there is no separate black-and-white file. The tracing letters are printed as hollow outlines rather than dots, which photocopies far better and does not disappear on a tired copier.

Cut these apart once. Keep them in an envelope and reuse them all season.
