Feed the Turkey: Start Here

How to play

The mat: an adult opens the mouth

- 1. Get ready. Cut out the turkey's mouth (page 3) and tape the mat to the front of a box, so the food drops inside.
- 2. Pick a card. The child takes one card from the pile.
- 3. Feed. The child counts out that many pompoms (or paper food) and feeds them to the turkey, one at a time, saying each number.
- 4. Record. Circle the number on a record page and mark an X on that many pieces of food.

Three levels of cards

● Dots (page 5): count the dots. ■ Numerals (page 6): read the number. ▲ Number words (page 7): read the word.

Each set has the numbers 1 to 10, 10 cards a set, 30 cards in all. Start a child on dots, then move up when feeding is easy.

What's inside (16 pages)

- The turkey face mat: in color (page 3) and an outline to color yourself (page 4)
- Cards to cut: dots (page 5), numerals (page 6) and number words (page 7)
- Record pages: feed, circle the number, mark an X on that many pieces of food (pages 8 and 9, 5 turns on each)
- Paper practice: color the food (page 10), count and write (page 11), count and circle the word (page 12), write about feeding (page 13)
- Make your own turkey: 9 pieces to cut (page 14) and the page to glue them on (page 15)
- Credits (page 16)

Ways to play

- Take turns. One child feeds; a partner counts out loud. Switch.
- Check it. Empty the box and count the food back out to see if it matches the card.
- Tongs or fingers. Use whatever your students use to pick up small things.

Prep

Print the mat on card stock if you can, and the cards on regular paper or card stock. You need scissors, crayons, glue sticks, a small box or container, and pompoms (or small paper balls, cotton balls or paper scraps). Choose the size of the food by your own classroom's safety rules. Cutting: the cards are one straight cut between neighbors; an adult can cut the mouth open with scissors or a craft knife.

This is a Thanksgiving counting game printed on paper.
