Places & Specials

Where students go and who they see. These are the cards that prevent most transition meltdowns, because the student can see where they are actually headed.

ALL DONE

The single most useful board in the pack.

FIRSTTHEN*How to use it

- 1 Put the required task on the left and something the student actually wants on the right.
- 2 Say it in six words: "First writing, then computer." Then stop talking.
- 3 Point at the board instead of repeating yourself.
- 4 Deliver the 'then' the instant the first task is done. Every time, or it stops working.

For when there is no time to build one.

Six common reinforcers, already filled in. Cover the ones you are not offering with a sticky note or an index card.

Offering it well

Point at two options and say “Which one?” Do not read all six aloud — six options is a demand, not a choice. For a student who is already shut down, offer the movement break first and come back to the rest.

The workhorse. Print one per student who needs one.

Velcro a card into each square and write the time or the activity name on the line. Seven slots covers most half-days; print two for a full day.

Add a finished pocket

Tape an envelope to the bottom of the strip. When an activity ends, the student pulls the card off and drops it in. Removing the card is itself reinforcing, and the shrinking strip shows how much of the day is left.

Thank you for using this resource

Everything here was built for the teacher who has thirty minutes of planning time and twelve students who each need something different. If it saved you an hour, it worked.
